Antebbe Operation: The entire edah did a peulat about the Antebbe Operation. It was one of the most meaningful and interesting peulot, and all of the kids seem to remember the things that they were told and really learned a lot about something that they weren't aware of. The girls began their peula off with a game of tag involving passengers, soldiers, and hijackers. They were supposed to realize how difficult it was to catch all the hijackers. Next we took them all inside and read to them what exactly the Antebbe Operation was. They heard reactions of countries worldwide, and then had the chance to write their own reactions about what the Israeli army chose to do in this case. All the kids really seemed to get a lot out of this activity and it was one of the greatest successes in terms of peulot tzrif this summer.

Pass the Package: In this peula you wrap a little prize (such as a chocolate bar) with newspaper, and label that newspaper with a specific question the camper has to answer. The prize is wrapped with many layers so that it becomes a fun and long process of opening the package and every layer they have something fun or meaningful to talk about.

Tea Party: One day we all got dressed up in Shabbat clothes and laid a picnic out. The girls all brought cute little snacks and we made them tea, and all just sat in a circle on a blanket talking and bonding as we snacked.

The Perfect Crime: This was one of the girl's favorites. Two girls leave the bunk and discuss everything about a specific crime that occurred. They have about five minutes to figure out every single detail. They then come back in the bunk, and the rest of the girls ask them ten questions separately about the crime. The goal is to have all ten answers that each girl said match.
