Back To The Future

Sosh Edelglass

We decorated a small room + turned it into a "time machine."
The windows were covered up so it was dark, + everything was covered w/ tin foil of shiny, reflective stuff. One Counselor ~~was~~ (myself) dressed up like a mad Scientist, + gave a brief spiel about how he had created a prototype time machine. Then, a few counselors started shining flashlights w/ colored translucent paper around the room, + turned on dramatic music. After a few seconds, the mad scientist announced they were in the past.

This was done 5-7 times, once for each group. When they weren't in the machine, the groups were making time travel gear out of markers + construction paper.

Then there was a round robin - each station was a ~~to~~ different period of Jewish history.

After lunch, we announced that the time machine was broken, so sent the kids on a scavenger hunt to recover the parts needed to repair the machine.

At night, we watched Back To The Future
