

Yom Kef

The goal of this day was to start of a week of non-stop fun. I wanted them to end tzad aleph with a bang.

We started by telling them it was yom math and they did a math lesson for 20 minutes. Then we told them it was really yom kef and they split in to boys and girls.

The boys came to play monster ball and the girls stayed at the beit am to play human foosball. We then switched half way through

Monster ball

This is a combination of kickball and softball. Bascially you play softball but you use a kickball.

The kickball must bounce once before you hit it with the bat.

There are no foul balls. You can hit the ball in any direction.

Each batter gets three swings there are no balls.

If the ball touches you after it touches the bat you are out.

Human foosball

Use tape to make eight lines on the ground. The middle two are fives facing each other

The next two out are threes facing the goals they are shooting on

Then twos and then the goalie who is by his or self.

Create a goal. I think three benches on their sides on top of each other works perfectly

Then you play soccer but you have to keep at least one foot on your line.

Then we played capture the mattress which was largely unsuccessful. In general I have found that all forms capture the flag do not work as well as I would like.

During lunch we made them grilled cheese using the teva ovens

After sha'at menucha we made edible maps of Israel then ate them

Then we did clothing Olympics. The bunk goes back to the bunk and dresses one kid in as much clothing as possible. A type of clothing is shouted and each bunk has 10 seconds to find the article on the person wearing all the clothes.

Then we played the Viking game.

There is one object or person in the middle. Each bunk forms a line like the rays of a sun. then they are each given a number. The person in charge calls a number and that person from each bunk runs around the circle back to their line than under the legs of everyone in the bunk to tag the person/object in the middle.

It ended with mishmar in which we did the battle of the sexes and each gender had to prove that they were superior.
