

Yom Ramoscers
Edah report
Shoafim 2008

The major part of this day was spent with each bunk making a still movie. Each bunk took a series of digital pictures and created a script to narrate it. The movie making took four hours in two two hour clumps. It was very successful. There was one major problem. The first was that it took almost a full 30 minutes just to upload the pictures on to my computer and that's ignoring the time to set up the projector and for each group to organize the pictures in the order that they wanted.

We had two extra activities.

In the morning we did a movie trivia challenge that used the projector to show quotes, pictures, and they played music and the bunks had to identify the movies they came from. It was a lot of fun. It was not easy for the counselors to collect all of the quotes, music, and pictures. I am including them in a separate file.

The way we did every trivia game is as such

Each group gets into rows of four and only the front row can answer the question. Anyone in the front row can raise their hand and the front row can work together to answer the question. After each question the front row moves to the back and the second row is the new front row.

Lastly we really had one more slot for activities so we took a commercial break to have a battle of the sexes challenge. We ran a race around the migrash and had other relay and cheering challenges.
