Dodgeball with a Jewish twist because we love Judaism

Counselors play, too! Be good dugmaot

RULES

- No hitting people in the face. If you do hit someone in the face, you're out
- If you catch the ball that's thrown at you, the person who threw it is out
- If you're out, stay against the side wall. You have one extra life, however, and you can return to the game if you approach a madrich or madricha and explain to them which line of ashrei is your favorite and why. All madrichim have siddurim.
- Aruv:
An aruv is a boundary that defines the outlines of a community. Here at machine Ramah, we have an aruv: it is a piece of string that goes around the entire camp. This allows us to carry things on Shabbat. At any point in the game, the game master can say ARUV and everyone has to touch the wall and run around in one big circle. The game resumes after that like normal.

- Lot's Wife

There is a story in the Torah where Lot's wife is told not to look back upon the sinful city that she is leaving. At the very last moment, she looks back and is immediately turned into a pillar of salt. At any point in the game, a madrich can yell "Lot's Wife!" When this is called, everyone must freeze. Then if you move, you're out (just like freeze dance!). You can't move until we can tell you to resume the game!

Split edah into two teams: bunks and bottom bunks

Round 1: Regular dodgeball. Woo.

Round 2: Love your neighbor as yourself pairs: if your pair gets out, you're out too. Pick pairs by finding someone you've never talked to before, and someone not in your bunk Round 3: Kippot – one hand dodgeball.

You can only play with one hand. Love your neighbor rule does not apply any more
